

Velo-Fieber in Vendôme: Enthusiasten jagen nach den wertvollen Bidons!

In Vendôme versammelten sich am 6. Oktober 2024 leidenschaftliche Radsportfans, um das Paris-Tours-Rennen zu verfolgen und Erinnerungen zu sammeln.

In Vendôme, local fans gathered on October 6, 2024, to witness the cycling event Paris-Tours, despite the gloomy weather. At around 1 PM, excitement filled the air as spectators, including avid collectors of discarded water bottles, positioned themselves strategically along the route. Just before the professional cyclists' arrival, former professional cyclist Thomas Voeckler jogged through the streets, blending in with the crowd. Enthusiasts, like Bruno, shared their stories of past bike races, eagerly anticipating this year's event and joining in the fun of retrieving bottles dropped by the racers. Some bottles were not even empty—Bruno humorously mentioned that he often tossed out their contents due to concerns about doping.

As the tension built up, police motorcycles signaled the imminent arrival of the racers. Spectators captured the moment with their smartphones, first catching sight of the breakaway riders followed by the main peloton racing towards Tours. With the cyclists speeding by, the streets soon cleared as life in Vendôme resumed its normal rhythm, while rain returned to punctuate the end of the event. The day showcased the vibrant local interest in cycling, with both amateurs and enthusiasts soaking in the lively atmosphere, proving once again how events like these bring people together.
